Irish County Maps Showing the Locations of Churches

Because the Irish government did not begin recording births or christenings, marriages, and burials for all Irishmen until 1864,¹ the major sources for these vital records are kept by the different churches in Ireland.

Before using church records, however, the researcher must be able to answer these two questions:

1. What churches were located in or near my ancestors' localities?
2. How do I locate their records for research?

The purpose of this paper is to help researchers identify the churches in the area where their ancestors lived.

Civil parishes are areas of local government administration, the names and boundaries of which seldom correspond to the parish boundaries of the churches in the area. It is often easy to determine the name of a civil parish, as explained in step one below. However, the task of determining which churches existed in an area is more complicated. These maps simplify the task somewhat. Following is a brief explanation of how to use these maps along with details of how to locate the church records of the various denominations. The explanation contains book and film numbers of the Genealogical Department Library. The numbers, however, will be of little value for those researchers not living near the main library or one of its branches.

How to Use These Maps

Step 1: Determine the name of the civil parish (an area of local government administration, not church jurisdiction) and county for the town or place where your ancestor lived by locating it in the following topographical reference book:

Alphabetical Index to the Towns and Townlands of Ireland (Dublin: Alexander Thom and Co., 1877; available on film 476.999 item 2 or book Ref. 941.5 X2ci).² This book, taken from the 1871 census, contains several separate indexes. The first is the separate "Index of Townlands," which is the major portion of the book. If you do not find your locality in this index, check next in the "Index of Parishes." If that fails, check under all possible spelling variations.

Step 2: Look at the alphabetical listing of civil parishes following the appropriate county map in this research guide. Coordinates are given for the location of each civil parish on the map.

Each of the counties of Cork and Tipperary have several maps but only one listing of parishes. On the listing and appearing in the first section of the map grid column for County Cork are letters referring the reader to the correct map. These letters are:

E—Refers to the east Cork map

M—Refers to the middle Cork map

W—Refers to the west Cork map

The dividing of the maps into east, middle, and west portions were done only for this paper and do not represent actual political divisions of Cork.

The same is true of County Tipperary, which for this paper has been arbitrarily divided into north and south sections.

Step 3: Locate your civil parish on the map using the coordinates found in step two. Letters such as R or E appear in the locations within the civil parish boundaries where a church was located. A key, which explains what denomination each letter represents, appears on the map.

Step 4: To find the exact names of the churches on the map that apply to your problem, refer to the alphabetical listing of civil parishes. In addition to the names of the churches, an attempt has been made to determine dates of known records for Church of Ireland and Catholic records. No dates are given for other denominations because of a lack of reliable source materials. Generally speaking, few Presbyterian registers begin before 1819, and Methodist registers usually do not begin before 1816. Further details are given in the accompanying explanations on each denomination.

Note: When more than one church of the same denomination exists within a civil parish, they are listed as they appear within the parish from left to right, beginning at the top and working toward the bottom of each parish. Blank spaces indicate that there was no entry for that place and denomination in Thom's 1853 Directory. The name of a church is sometimes followed in the listings by a number in parentheses (Ballyeaston [2]). This indicates the number of churches of the same denomination in that place.

¹The civil registration of non-Catholic marriages began in 1845.

²The General Topographical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland (issued with the 1901 census of Ireland, House of Commons sessional papers, 1904) can also be used to determine civil parish boundaries. This is on film 865.092. It has also been reprinted in microfiche format by Irish Microforms Ltd, Dublin, Ireland.

Notes on the Compilation of Maps

These maps were compiled by using the various churches listed in Thom's Irish Almanac and Official Directory for 1853 (Dublin: Alexander Thom, 1853; 941.5 E4th 1853; film 990,105). The churches were then plotted on civil parish outline maps based on the Index to the Townland Survey (Dublin: Ordnance Survey Office, 1833; Q 941.5 E7o). As nearly as possible, the churches have been plotted in their appropriate locations in relationship to the civil parish boundaries. No effort has been made to plot churches that were extinct in 1853 or that were established after 1853. Thom's 1853 Directory was used because it was the most readily accessible edition for the compilers.

These maps should be a significant help to researchers attempting to locate Irish church records. Any corrections and additions from readers will be carefully considered for future revisions.

Locating the Churches of the Various Denominations

Finding Records of the Church of Ireland

From 1560 to 1871 the Anglican Church was the Irish state religion and, therefore, was called the Church of Ireland; however, its membership included only a minority of the Irish people. For example, in 1834 only 11 percent of the population belonged to this church,³ but because it was the state sponsored religion, entries can be found in the parish registers for persons of other denominations. This is especially true of burial registers, because Catholics were often buried in Church of Ireland churchyards. In any research problem, it is wise to search the relevant Church of Ireland parish registers regardless of your ancestor's known religious affiliations.

The listings accompanying these maps give the known commencement dates of Church of Ireland parish registers as they appear in the Twenty-third Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records in Ireland (Dublin: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1891; 941.5 A5r 23rd). An astrisk (*) has been placed by the names of parishes where registers were destroyed in the Public Record Office fire of 1922. When searching for the records of one of these parishes, determine if a transcript or printed copy was made of the burned registers before the fire. Such copies may still be in the hands of the local ministers, local libraries, or in the two Irish public record offices.

The following suggestions should be followed to locate Church of Ireland parish registers for a particular parish:

1. Check the card catalog of the Genealogical Department Library of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or one of its branch libraries to see if they have copies of the parish registers.
2. One of the Irish public record offices may hold copies. The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, 66 Balmoral Avenue, Belfast, BT9 6NY, Northern Ireland, has an extensive collection of photostatic and microfilm copies of many of the existing Church of Ireland registers for Northern Ireland. The Public Record Office of Ireland, Four Courts, Dublin, 7, Ireland, has a collection of parish registers and transcripts.

3. It is also possible to write to the minister of a parish to ask if he would search his parish registers. Ministers' addresses can be obtained from The Church of Ireland Directory (Dublin: Universal Publishing Co., published annually; Ref. 941.5 K22ci 1976).

Finding Roman Catholic Parish Registers of Christenings, Marriages, and Burials

As of 1834, 81 percent of the Irish people belonged to the Roman Catholic Church.⁴ Even though the Catholics were a majority, the government had long mounted heavy persecution against them in favor of the established Church of Ireland. Because of this heavy persecution, very few Catholic church records exist before 1800. In 1703 the Penal Laws, forbidding Catholics to keep registers, were enacted. These laws were repealed in 1829 to emancipate Catholics. As a result, most registers commence in the first half of the nineteenth century. Another result of this intense persecution is the large number of Catholic entries, especially burial entries, in the Church of Ireland parish registers. After 1745 marriage between a Catholic and a Protestant had to be performed in the established Church of Ireland to be legal, although a marriage of two Catholics in a Catholic church was legal.

In sparsely populated areas, the Catholic ministers may have traveled periodically to several parishes on a circuit. The people also may have traveled to find work or to visit relatives. Therefore, you should also search the records of nearby parishes in addition to the ancestral parish. Sometimes a search of all parishes within a five- to ten-mile radius may be necessary. If the ancestors lived near a larger town or city, the records of those places should also be searched.

The commencement dates given on these listings are taken from a manuscript list compiled by the National Library of Ireland when they filmed a large number of the Catholic Registers (those for the diocese of Dublin were not filmed).⁵ Another source of commencement dates for some of the registers is in the published results of a survey made by the Catholic Record Society of Ireland entitled "Parochial

⁴Akenson, p. 165.

⁵A summary of this list is entitled "List of Roman Catholic Parishes in Ireland with Registers Commencing Before 1900" (Ref. 941.5 K2L; film 973.221 item 3; not applicable for those in the diocese of Dublin).

Registers" (compiled by James MacCaffrey, Archivium Hibernicum, vol. 3, 1914, pp. 366-406).

To find the records of the Catholic parishes, the following suggestions are made:

1. The original Catholic registers are with the local parish priests, and frequently the priest will consent to search the registers. Addresses of parish priests can be obtained from the Irish Catholic Directory (Dublin: James Duffey and Co., published annually; Ref. 941.5 K22c 1972).
2. The National Library of Ireland has microfilmed many of the Catholic parishes (except for the diocese of Dublin). These microfilms can only be searched through the Genealogical Office, Dublin Castle, Dublin, Eire.
3. A check in the card catalog of the Genealogical Department Library or one of its branch libraries should be made for copies of the parish registers.

Finding Records of the Presbyterian Church and Secession Presbyterian Churches

In 1834, 8 percent of the Irish population was Presbyterian, with the majority located in the northern province of Ulster where many Scotch (Scottish) Presbyterians had been transplanted in the early 1600s. At least 50 percent of the counties of Down and Antrim were Presbyterian in 1834.⁶

The earliest known Presbyterian Church registers, which are for Antrim, County Antrim, commenced in 1674. Unfortunately, the majority of the parish registers do not exist before 1819, when the ministers were required to keep registers of baptisms and marriages. Until 1844, Presbyterian marriages were not legally recognized; therefore, for legal reasons (to maintain inheritance and property rights) many Presbyterian baptisms and marriages occurred in the Church of Ireland. In 1845 the government began the civil registration of Protestant marriages nationally.

Even though parish registers may not exist for the desired time period, other uniquely Presbyterian records may help the researcher. Foremost among these would be the Session Minute Books, sometimes called the Kirk Session Minutes. These are minutes of meetings of the elders of each parish, wherein they discussed new arrivals to the parish, the births or marriages of congregational members, candidates for church discipline, and other matters.

Another useful record is the Certificate of Transference, which is useful for tracing migrations. When a person moved from one congregation to another, he often carried a letter or certificate indicating his good standing in the previous congregation and his freedom from church censure. Internal controversies resulted in the "secession" movement in 1746. However, the group that seceded reunited with the main group in 1840. Therefore, the congregations listed on these maps as Presbyterian could include some of these "secession" congregations who had rejoined the main body by 1853. The term secession, as used for congregation on these maps, refers to various Presbyterian groups who had not rejoined the main movement as of 1853. For further details on the specific names of these groups refer to Thom's Irish Almanac and Official Directory for 1853 (Dublin: Alexander Thom, 1853; Ref. 941.5 E4th 1853; film 990.105), pp. 486-93.

To find the records of any of the secession or Presbyterian churches mentioned on this map, the following suggestions are made:

1. Find the history of the congregation of interest in one of the following reference books so that you can determine the establishment date and other necessary background information:
Rev. W. D. Killen, History of Congregations of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland and Biographical Notices of Eminent Presbyterian Ministers and Laymen (Belfast: James Cleeland, 1886; 941.5 K2ki; film 908.207). This contains histories on most of the non-seceding congregations.
Clarke H. Irwin, A History of Presbyterianism in Dublin and the South and West of Ireland (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1890; 941.5 K2ir; film 824.101). This is excellent for its histories of congregations outside of Ulster province.
Rev. David Steward, The Seceders in Ireland with Annals of Their Congregations (Belfast: Presbyterian Historical Society, Church House, 1950; 941.5 K2ste). This is a must for locating information on the numerous secession churches.
Rev. James McConnell, Presbyterianism in Belfast (Belfast: Davidson and McCormack, 1912; 941.61/B1 K2mc). This contains good histories of the many Belfast congregations.
2. A check in the card catalog of the Genealogical Department Library or one of its branch libraries should be made to see if they have copies of the parish registers.
3. The Public Record Offices in both Belfast and Dublin may have copies of the desired parish registers. Their addresses are given in the preceding explanation on Church of Ireland records.
4. The ministers' addresses can be determined by checking The Presbyterian Church in Ireland Directory (Belfast: T. H. Jordan, published annually; Ref 941.5 K22pr).
5. A few registers are deposited with the Presbyterian Historical Society, Church House, Fisher-

⁶Akenson, p. 165.

wick Place, Belfast, Northern Ireland. A list of the registers deposited as of 1962 can be found in Margaret Dickson Falley's Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research, Vol. 1: Repositories to Records (Evanston, Ill.: author, 1962), pp. 403-10.

Finding Wesleyan Methodist and Primitive Wesleyan Methodist Society Records

The Wesleyan Methodist Societies began in Ireland in 1747, but the majority of their members belonged to the Church of Ireland. The Methodists did not begin to develop their own churches until after 1816. A division of the Methodist Society also occurred in 1816; the Primitive Wesleyan Methodist Society members retained their belief that they should attend the established church, and the Wesleyan Methodists began their own churches and congregations. From 1816 exist some of the registers of baptisms for the Wesleyan Methodists. The Primitive Wesleyan Methodists continued with the established church until 1878, when they united with the Wesleysans.

The following suggestions are given for locating Methodist ancestors:

1. Search all of the nearby church records for your ancestors. This is the only option for finding Wesleyan ancestors prior to 1816 and for Primitive Wesleyan ancestors between 1816 and 1878.
2. Obtain advice from the public record offices in Belfast or Dublin as to the locations of any existing records. (Addresses of the record offices are given in the section on Church of Ireland records.)
3. Locations of current Methodist Churches may also be determined from Thom's Directory of Ireland, Volume II: Professional Directory (Dublin: Alex Thom and Co., published annually; 941.5 E4tho 1960 v. 2).

Finding Records of the Society of Friends (Quakers)

The first Quaker meeting was established in Ireland in 1654 at Lurgan in the county of Armagh. Most of the early members were of English origin, having come to Ireland during the Commonwealth of Cromwell (1649-60). Only a very small portion of the Irish people belonged to the Society of Friends.

The registers of births, marriages, and burials kept by the Society of Friends are among the best church records in Ireland. In 1671 the national meeting recommended that minutes and records be kept. The earliest known existing registers are those for the Mountmellick Meeting beginning in 1667; however, the registers often have many retrospective entries such as those for Mountmellick where the earliest entry is for a birth occurring in 1615. Further details about the records for each congregation appear in Olive C. Goodbody's Guide to Irish Quaker Records, 1654-1860 (Dublin: Irish Manuscripts Commission, 1967; Ref. 941.5 A2q).

The following suggestions are given for locating Quaker records:

1. The Genealogical Department Library has microfilms of transcript copies of the original records arranged in alphabetical order.
2. Records and indexes for Northern Ireland are at the Friend's Meeting House, Railway Street, Lisburn, County Antrim, Northern Ireland.
3. Records and indexes for Eire are housed at the Friend's House Library, 6 Eustace Street, Dublin, Eire.

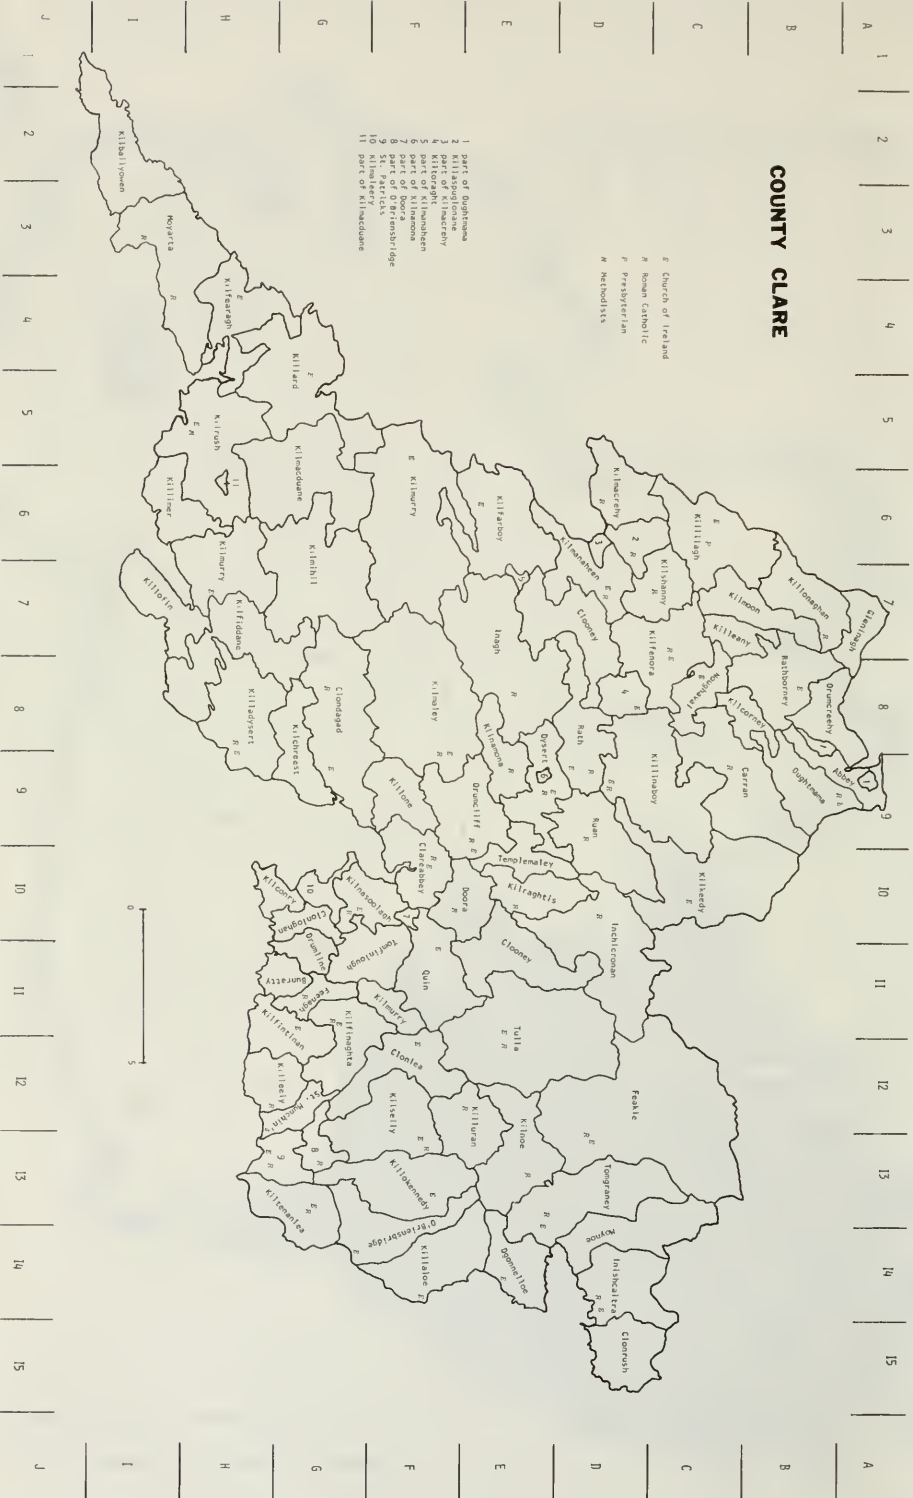

Finding Records of Baptists and Congregationalists (Sometimes Called Independents)

The members of these churches originally came into Ireland with Cromwell's army in the early 1650s. Because of religious persecutions and emigrations, very few records exist for these churches before the late 1700s. Their membership was very small. Most of the existing registers are still in the local custody of the ministers. A listing of some of the present congregations can be found in Thom's Directory of Ireland, Volume II: Professional Directory (Dublin: Alex Thom and Co., published annually; 941.5 E4tho 1960 v. 2).
